MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

SUBJECT : Midcareer Course and Advanced
Intelligence Seminar

Sir:

1. You wondered to Jack Blake whether or not the Midcareer Course and Advanced Intelligence Seminar could be combined into a single course, and, in essence, whether or not they are one and the same. They are not. The Advanced Intelligence Seminar is geared to exposing the student to international trends affecting foreign policy and national security interests. It permits a summation of the various directorates by a single speaker from each directorate, but then the thrust of the course, comprising two and one-half weeks, is geared toward the international and foreign policy scene, as well as an appreciation of problems in the U.S. such as the cities, urban development, youth of today, blacks, and alcoholism in the U.S. The composition of the course is minimum of GS-13 and up.

2. The Midcareer Course, on the other hand, spans a period of five weeks and dips into rather detailed presentations on the activities of the Agency from an office and division level. More or less, it is a nut and bolt course of what makes CIA tick. It spends a day or two on the Intelligence Community, and then the better part of two weeks on world affairs, such as the challenge of the 70's, the U.S.-Soviet strategic balance, and overall world problems. The course is geared to the Agency officer, GS-12 through -14.

3. If one went from the last two weeks of the Midcareer Course to the Advanced Intelligence Seminar, he could get the feeling of similarity in the fact that very little is said specifically about CIA.

4. Attached you will find the flyer on each course for easy comparison.
